MISCELLANEOUS READING. THE GULF STREAM. As the best known and longest studied of oceanic currents, the Gulf Stream affords us a perfect picture of the other, perhaps greater, but less appreciated rivers of warm and cold water which traverse our seas. Heated sharply-defined edge on either side, and flowing over a cushion of cold water running down from the arctic zone, rushes with a force equal to that of the Gulf of Mexico, along the shores of the Floridas. There curving upon a great are to north-eastward, it flows three miles, into the 40th degree of north latitude; yet such is the volume of that heated water, that its temperature through so long a journey only falls to 83 degrees or 84 degrees. In that latitude the Gulf Stream overflows its banks, and flaring out over many thousand square leagues, diminishing much in heat and velocity, yet reaches our shores, retaining enough of the former to rescue us from the horrors of a Labrador climate-to keep our seas open up to the 60th degree of latitude, when, on the opposite side of the Atlantic, the American continent is sealed up with ice, 960 miles south of the Orkneys; and that warm current of water causes the vapor-laden atmosphere of Britain, which, although much abused, is still, we believe, preferable to the six months of frost to which Canada and Russia are subjected in similar latitudes. Such a torrent of hot water traversing the Atlantic wastes naturally occasions great perturbations of the atmosphere. and the Gulf Stream may justly be called "a foul weather breeder." The English trader knows this well, but it must come much nearer home to the American navigator, because on either quitting or sailing towards his shores, he has invariably to traverse the Gulf Stream; and stretch across a belt of cold water, the arctic current, which intervenes between it and his home. There, and especially in the winter season, the storm cyclone, and cross-currents raise such a sea as shatters the best found barque, and tests the skill and hardihood of the seaman. From New York to the bay of Chesapeake, snow storms and gales are encountered which mock all human skill and nerve. The trader from the Pacific or China finds herself in a few hours an ice-encumbered wreck, with the crew paralyzed by cold, and, but for the beneficent Gulf Stream, would assuredly be lost. Then the cunning master-mariner, undis-POR the prevention and cure of Fever and Ague Then the cunning master-mariner, undis-and Bilions Fevers. This wonderful remedy mayed by the battle of the elements, occasioned by the contact of the Gulf Stream with the arctic current, turns his ship's prow again towards the former, and confidently steers towards its well-defined limits. His barque summer-heat. Now the ice disappears from her apparel: the sailor bathes his stiffened limbs in tepid water. Feeling himself invigorated and refreshed with the genial warmth about him, he realises, out there at sea, the fable of Antieus and mother Earth. and beat back to the north-west; but each time that he is driven off he comes forth from this stream, like the ancient son of Nepmany days, he at last triumphs and enters
